

Greg Duff Quoted in HowStuffWorks About the Limits of Guest Privacy in Hotels and Motels

Media Mention
January 17, 2018
HowStuffWorks

Contact
Greg Duff

In an article titled, "Does Checking In Mean You Check Your Privacy at the Door?" on HowStuffWorks, Greg Duff points out that the amount of privacy that hotel and motel guests can expect largely depends on the guest's location on the property. "In public spaces, little to none. In hotel rooms, a considerable amount," he said.

Greg also noted that hotels generally will not provide guest ledger details to anyone, unless in grave circumstances such as a threat of harm to hotel guests or employees, or the issuance of a search warrant by a law enforcement officer.

Read the full article on the HowStuffWorks website.