

Mediations

Laner Muchin attorneys represent clients in labor mediations before the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and public labor relations boards as well as in private mediation proceedings. Our attorneys advise our clients on whether a labor dispute is well-suited for mediation, if not legally required, as well as the appropriate time to use mediation during the bargaining process.

Our attorneys prepare our clients for mediation and act as effective advocates of our clients' position before the mediator to help insure the mediator is armed with the appropriate information to help bring the parties to a reasonable and favorable resolution of the dispute.

Experience

Below are representative samples of the types of mediation services we provide Laner Muchin clients:

- ✓ Advising our clients on whether mediation should be used and, if so, the appropriate timing.
- ✓ Developing and implementing effective strategies to help ensure mediation is effective and results in a favorable resolution of the outstanding issues.
- ✓ Preparing and presenting an effective defense of our clients' position to provide the mediator with the information he or she needs to resolve the dispute on terms favorable to our client.
