The entirety of Brian's legal practice has concentrated on representing management in labor and employment matters.

He regularly services clients on a wide range of employment/labor matters including, but not limited to: individual, class and collective wage and hour cases; prevailing wage issues, discrimination, harassment, and retaliation claims; leaves of absence; domestic violence issues impacting the workplace; disability accommodation; whistleblower claims; unfair competition matters; public and private sector arbitration; employment counseling; drafting and reviewing employment policies, employment agreements, separation agreements, settlement agreements, restrictive covenants, and consulting agreements; and preparing severance plans and related exit program documents for reorganizations.

Prior to joining Laner Muchin, Brian was in the Air Force and honorably retired as a Master Sergeant (E-7) from the 41st Aerial Port, 403rd Reserve Wing, Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi.

He served as the NCOIC (Non Commissioned Officer In Charge) of Special Handling, which ensured that dangerous cargo (i.e., bombs, small-arms ammunition, radioactive material, flammables, corrosives and miscellaneous material such as highly magnetized material that could affect
