January 13, 2021

The new year 2021 is likely to bring many changes to US immigration and travel requirements. A new White House administration and the evolving situation regarding efforts to contain the global pandemic assure that we should hear of many developments in policies and procedures. For starters, here are two such developments:

- Negative COVID Tests To Be Required For All US Travelers – Effective January 26, all international air passengers will be required to show written proof of a negative COVID-19 test. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) announced the new policy, which will require negative test results within three days prior to departure. The requirement applies to individuals regardless as to...
