

---

russ frackman quoted in variety

---

April 13, 2012

Quoted in the April 13, 2012 issue of Variety, IP litigator Russ Frackman observed that the appellate court cited the common law doctrine of "willful blindness" in suggesting that user-generated content sites may no longer take comfort in the "concept of plausible deniability, where you set up a system so you can plausibly deny knowledge," effectively burying your head in the sand.

View Article

attorneys

Russell J. Frackman

practice areas

commercial litigation
entertainment & ip litigation intellectual property
litigation