November 2013

Marc Mayer was featured in a November 7, 2013, Daily Journal cover story on the recent rise in litigation surrounding "hack and cheat" websites, which help players to modify video games to gain a competitive advantage.

According to the Daily Journal, "While many litigators take on one or two high-profile cases of this kind, Mayer has become a go-to litigator for several major game companies and considers taking on hack and cheat websites to be a basic part of his job, which he describes as a "content protection practice."

"It's not the majority of my practice," Mayer said, "but it's a significant part."
