From the article...

"Gary McLaughlin, a Mitchell Silberberg & Knupp LLP partner who represents California employers, told Law360 although remote work is more common now than before 2020, the IBM ruling and others arising from the pandemic's unique juncture may not carry much weight.

'I'm sure they'll have implications, but what those are exactly will be difficult to assess because we're no longer operating under government shutdown orders,' he said."
