Jonathan Turner was quoted in the article, "Supreme Court Starbucks case could grind down agency powers," published by Washington Examiner on April 23, 2024. The article discusses the Starbucks Corp. v. McKinney Supreme Court case which could make it more difficult for the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to secure court orders requiring reinstatement of fired workers or other remedies for alleged illegal labor practices.

From the article...

"Starbucks's petition essentially asks SCOTUS to reject the notion that when the NLRB seeks a preliminary injunction, the lower court should give deference to the NLRB's version of events even if the employer presents substantial evidence that calls into question the NLRB's version of events," Jonathan Turner, a partner at Mitchell Silberberg & Knupp, told the Washington Examiner."
