Overview

Chris is a gritty advocate. He approaches each case as if he has a personal stake in the outcome and believes the uncertainty of litigation is too high for his clients to expect anything less. Before becoming a lawyer, he graduated from business school with a degree in accounting. He uses this background to provide fresh insights to corporate and individual clients with an eye on the bottom line.

As a member of the firm's Business Litigation Service Group, Chris represents business owners, individuals, trustees and fiduciaries in a wide variety of disputes involving breach of contract, real estate, employment, and corporate governance.
