Overview

Daniel understands that a business's objectives and goals are one of the most important aspects of a legal strategy; he prides himself on understanding the client's business and industry, and takes personal responsibility for meeting the client's objectives. He insists on personally seeing each matter through and holds himself responsible for obtaining the best results for his clients. As chair of the Business Litigation Service Group, Daniel is prepared every day to respond to whatever needs his clients have, no matter how large or small, and does so with the desire to add to his clients' success. As managing partner of the firm's St. Louis office, Dan advises and mentors our St. Louis attorneys and leads its strategic growth.

Daniel serves as co-chair of the firm's Manufacturing Service Group. For more than 20 years he has assisted business owners in both transactional and litigation matters with particular emphasis in the construction, heavy equipment, real estate, fuel, banking and gaming industries. Daniel's transaction experience includes guiding clients through every facet of a business acquisition or sale, from the start in preparing for sale, through negotiations, due diligence, closing, and even post-closing matters, such as indemnity disputes. He also handles real estate development including acquisition, zoning, private and public financing, and sale. In addition, Daniel handles litigation matters. He has tried many cases in state and federal court and has a significant depth of experience in bankruptcy and insolvency litigation as well as administrative matters such as zoning appeals and tax appeals.

Prior to law school Daniel studied finance and worked in the corporate world. His background, and acumen with numbers and financial concepts, allows him to provide another level of advice and guidance when evaluating terms of deals or analyzing litigation.
