The incoming presidential administration is poised for a major impact on the international trade landscape for the next four years. Proposed tariff changes present an array of new challenges to manufacturers, with steep financial penalties in store for those who are unprepared.

Join Amundsen Davis's International Trade Service Group Partner Ngosong Fonkem for a webcast to explore the potential economic landscape that may be shaped by the new administration and what manufacturers can do immediately to stay ahead of potential disruptions to their businesses. This session will explore strategies to mitigate trade risks and capitalize on new opportunities.
