In the high-stakes world of sports, negotiation is more than just a skill—it's a strategic advantage. The strategies that drive success in sports law are not just about making the right deal; they are about managing expectations, navigating conflict, and identifying creative solutions under pressure. These principles in sports law extend far beyond the playing field and into the broader business landscape.

Join Luke Fedlam for this lecture hosted by The Ohio State University Moritz College of Law as he shares practical insights on dispute resolution developed from his work advising athletes, institutions, and business professionals. The lecture provides a practical playbook of the tactics and strategies that can establish successful negotiations in sports and beyond.
