

Defended a Physician Group and Practitioners in Alleged Failure to Monitor and Manage Outpatient Coumadin Therapy

Amundsen Davis defended a physician group and practitioners in a case involving alleged failure to monitor and manage outpatient Coumadin therapy resulting in brain hemorrhage and death. The case was resolved after thorough discovery revealed patient non-compliance with prescriptive directions, and evidence of consuming alcohol against medical advice. Proof of alcohol consumption was obtained from credit card transactions and receipts from restaurants where patient vacationed.
