

Represented the Parent Company of a Factory in a Personal Injury Case After an Employee was Hurt During an Industrial Accident

Amundsen Davis represented the parent company of a factory in a personal injury case where an employee was hurt in an industrial incident. The case involved complex claims for negligent supervision and training levied against the parent company, which would have potentially involved issues of first impression in Wisconsin. Preparation for the case included e-discovery and review of more than 30 thousand documents. The case settled to the satisfaction of the client.
