January 13, 2020

Continuing their mission to offer clients exceptional and broad legal services, Amundsen Davis and Brannon Sowers & Cracraft are pleased to announce a strategic alliance. Founded in Indianapolis in 2008, Brannon Sowers & Cracraft is a boutique intellectual property, business, and litigation law firm representing clients throughout the U.S. Amundsen Davis is a full-service business law firm with offices throughout the Midwest and national practices. This alliance will be an essential driver in leveraging the development of new business opportunities and an expansion of the reach of both law firms.

"This move presents the best of both worlds; each firm utilizing the resources of the other while retaining its own identity," said Stephen Stitle, Amundsen Davis's chief operating officer. "It's a key step in our efforts to provide clients of both firms with broader legal services."

A strategic alliance creates a network that provides expanded capabilities through the individual firms and draws on the resources of the allied firms. The Brannon firm clients will have access to the broad range of business service capabilities of Amundsen Davis and Amundsen Davis's clients will benefit from Brannon's team of highly credentialed patent attorneys and agents who complement Amundsen Davis's intellectual property team's experience and broaden their technical capability.

"To better service our clients, we are continuously monitoring industries, improving our specially concentrated knowledge, and looking for ways we can continue to offer the highest quality services," said Larry Schechtman, Amundsen Davis's managing partner.

"Having the quality services and reputation of the Amundsen Davis firm of attorneys will enable our law firms to provide the array of legal services demanded of sophisticated clients," added John Brannon, chief executive officer of Brannon Sowers & Cracraft.
