During the pandemic courts shifted to remote hearings and attorneys are wondering if they will endure post-pandemic. Most attorneys are in agreement that remote hearings are a time and money saver, specifically for things like “notice of motion hearings” where you are simply setting a schedule, but many attorneys also can't wait to get back to arguing in the courtroom.

In the article titled, “III. Attys Hope Virtual Hearings Will Endure Post-Pandemic” Lew Bricker gives his thoughts on virtual hearings and why he values in-person interaction at the courthouses.
