tam lawsuits, media-related claims, and malpractice lawsuits.

- Obtained a favorable decision in an appeal and cross-appeal involving the extent of coverage available under an accountant's professional liability policy for two lawsuits brought by two lenders against the insured accounting firm arising from three separate audits. In an extensive published opinion, the Tenth Circuit adopted the insurer-side view that the applicable "interrelated claims" policy language sweeps broadly to encompass a range of logical and causal connections and that the proper focus is on whether claims have any meaningful commonalities, not on the differences between the claims as policyholders typically argue. *American Southwest Mortgage Corp., et al v.
