January 9, 2020

In this episode of Sara and Josh Talk About Drones, Sara Baxenberg and Josh Turner talk about remote ID—the ability to remotely identify unmanned aircraft systems (UAS) and their operators while the drone is in flight. Sara and Josh dig into the Federal Aviation Administration’s (FAA) long-anticipated Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) on remote ID, which was released at the end of 2019 and proposes rules for UAS manufacturers and operators to implement an industry-wide remote ID system. In the podcast, Sara and Josh discuss the proposed rules, attempt to clear up some of the misimpressions about the FAA’s proposal that have surfaced since its release, and predict potential points of contention that may arise during the comment period.
