

The Great Green North: A Discussion on Canada's Environmental Regulations

The WELL

July 28, 2021

On today's episode, Martha Marrapese and W. Scott Thurlow discuss Canada's regulatory developments in the environmental and chemical spaces. Martha and Scott offer a review of the environmental regulatory differences between Canada and the United States. They discuss Canada's unprecedented move to classify all plastic as toxic, the future of nanotechnology, Health Canada's regulation of perfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS), and amendments under consideration to update the Canadian Environmental Protection Act (CEPA).
